The Burn International Challenge is a unique, widely used organotypic tissue culture model to evaluate the efficacy of new skin substitutes before their clinical application. Nine commercially available skin substitutes are used as a biological test system in the model. The following products were tested: split-thickness autograft (STA), commercial allografts (CA), epidermal autografts (EA), bovine collagen sheet (BC), fibrin sealant (FS), lyophilized bovine collagen (LBC), oxidized bovine collagen (OC), synthetic polymers (SP) and epidermal growth factor on poly(glycolic-co-lactic acid) (EGF). The evaluation of the biological test was based on criteria such as 1) on growth rate, 2) viability, 3) revascularization and 4) gross evaluation. We found a good correlation of biological test results from all tested products. The biological test provides an early evaluation of the new products and helps to select the products that can be used in the clinical trial. Carotid artery stenosis and microemboli detected by transcranial Doppler. We studied 31 consecutive patients with carotid artery stenosis using a commercially available transcranial Doppler (TCD) system. The technique is based on the detection of emboli which are detected
